WASHINGTON (NEA)

A number of ramifications have now arisen as a result of President Eisenhower's new policy of inviting to America the Russian counterpart of U.S. officials asked to Moscow.

Some questions were raised at a reception at the Chilean embassy the other day.

"If they invite Mrs. Frederick A. Groves, president of the DAR, do you suppose the president of the Daughters of the Russian Revolution would come?" asked Pete Borlo, local socialist.

"Jim Bennet, head of U.S. prisons, might get some new ideas if he was invited," quipped another guest.

"Bet Allen Dulles, head of the Central Intelligence Agency, is dying for an invitation," said Jack Davis, Washington attorney.

"Then we'd have to take Gen Ivan Serov, his nearest counterpart, sightseeing through CIA," volunteered another.

Everyone there agreed that the White House would be up against a real protocol stickler if the Russians happened to invite Wendell Barnes, head of the U.S. Small Business Administration.
